The tool of choice for image sharpening! The sharpening may cause other effects in processed images. The distortion, moiré or iris blur is a usually an intentional effect and shouldn't be removed. Using the fix of the focus is another story and there is a risk of color or tint changes. The software manually refocuses your image, based on the various features of the camera. AKVIS Refocus cleans up the image and therefor transforms it into a photo looking like it was taken with the best photo equipment. The applied effects are based on the selected parameters, or may be automatically depending on the object or the angle of the picture. The polished image doesn't retain any traces of the software. When you open an image that contains an out of focus area, AKVIS Refocus calculates the correct amount of blurring. The software has a powerful user interface, which allows you to choose an area of interest for the correction. The selected area must be present in the entire photo and selected between the left and right edges of the image. You can also choose to apply the image processing to both the sides of the photo. The regular and specific effects are available to the user. So, if you want to add the blur to the left or right part of the image, you can do it with a few clicks. The Refocus functionality includes several image enhancement effects. AKVIS Refocus can replace image distortions caused by using the wrong focus point or zooming in on them. This means that you can calculate the effect and automatically correct the blurred image. The effect may remove unwanted background objects, too. Another function helps to perform the similar effect that is used in nature photos for birds, flowers, etc. The software accepts all your digital camera options, such as ISO, white balance, depth, aperture, etc. The parameters may be set once, or for all processed images. The adjustable parameters allow you to let the software examine the image with several possibilities. You can also choose the option to preserve the original settings for the processed images. Using the automatic function in AKVIS Refocus, you can apply the effects to the picture you want to modify. The final image is transformed into an advanced post-processing tool, only for the sharper image. Nuvigation, an application that analyzes your flights and navigation preferences and presents a list of recommendations based on them, has been officially released. The free software is now compatible with many of the popular standard and 3D model formats. The Nuvigation

What's New In AKVIS Refocus?

AKVIS Refocus is a reliable photo editor that can help you repair the unpleasant out-of-focus effect. The image distortion can appear when the camera is used with an incorrect focus point or if the image is captured before the device can set the right focus. The resulting images are blurred or not sharp enough. Photo fixer AKVIS Refocus offers several sharpening tools that enable you to add the crispness effect to overly blurred areas, as well as apply artificial blurring to other areas. In other words the object you wish to capture in a photo needs to be in-focus, while the background can be blurred. When the camera rendered the focus in a wrong point, the image loses its subject and the problem needs to be repaired. With AKVIS Refocus you can apply several types of sharpening effects, according to the area in the photo you wish to refocus. The basic Refocus requires that you manually select the focus area and the background, then applies the correction according to the adjusted parameters. The correction refers to the focus fix and the background blurring. Specialized sharpening tools For a quicker and effortless process, you can choose the Tilt-Shift or the Iris Blur. The Tilt-Shift technique allows you to apply a gradual blur filter, in order to simulate the Bokeh effect. Thus, the top and bottom margins of the photo suffer the most blurring, while the center is sharp. Dotted lines mark the areas of transition from more to less blur. The Iris Blur works similarly, only the blur lines are not applied horizontally, but circularly. Additionally, the transition between the blur zones are much softer than in theTilt-Shift. You can easily increase the diameter of the iris, by the vertical or the horizontal axes. Additionally, you may adjust the level of blur, rotation or distortion applied to the image. In-focus photos within seconds With AKVIS Refocus you can easily apply advanced image distortion effects to your pictures. The software specializes in applying blur and sharpness to the image, thus artificially correcting the focus in them. Moreover, it offers a Before/After paralleled view or displays the original image and the result in separate tabs.
