Q: Adding the value of a HashMap as an object property I have a HashMap that stores some values, but I don't know the number of them. I want to add a property to each of them. Consider this class: `public class Colors { String colour; public String getColor() { return colour; }`

public void setColor(String colour) { this.colour = colour; } }

I created a List of color objects that holds these hashes. I add color objects to the list with a static method of the object that adds colors. `List colors = new ArrayList(); Colors color1 = new Colors(); Colors color2 = new Colors(); colors.add(color1); colors.add(color2);` The thing is that I don't know the number of objects, so I created a for loop to add all the colors to the object but, I can't add the values of the HashMap as a color property to the object. `for(Map.Entry entry : map.entrySet()) { Color color = new Color(); color.setR(entry.getValue()); color.setG(entry.getValue()); color.setB(entry.getValue()); colors.add(color); }` I thought of storing the values in the object first and then, in the loop fill the HashMap, but that would increase the size of the object. Is there a way to do this? Maybe, by creating a class
