1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a billiard table with a pool ball catching device, and more particularly to a device for catching a pool ball which may be removed therefrom.

2. Description of the Prior Art In billiard tables, it is a common practice to employ a pool ball catching device which is pivotally mounted on a base in such a way that the base may move with respect to the table in a direction perpendicular to the playing surface thereof. Such devices are described in U.S. Pat. Nos. 2,910,921 and 2,934,877. These devices have in common the fact that the pool ball catching or removal element consists of a basically conical shaped member which is rotatably mounted on a base. When a user blows, the pool ball catches the conical shaped member and the base moves downwardly due to the centering action of the conical shaped member. By detaching the base, the pool ball can be removed from the catching element. However, as the point of the catching element is only located at the bottom of the base, the pool ball may roll laterally of the base and escape therefrom. This is particularly noticeable when the ball is hit with a force perpendicular to the surface of the table such as, for example, a cue ball being hit in the direction of play.
