JNU teacher reportedly assaulted in Jharkhand; slain dog missing in Kolhapur A resident of Kolhapur in Maharashtra took a video of a man who had allegedly fired two shots at his pet dog. The video has gone viral on social media. news Crime Sitting on a lone tree, the dog looks sad and helpless, weeping on the barren ground in front of the dark-coloured man, who walks past the pet. As he sits by the tree, the man can be seen wiping off the dog's tears with his t-shirt. The dog is one of the many pets that a group of people had left at a Kolhapur forest area. According to the man who took a video of this particular scene, it all started with a call to the Pet Ambassador's Association (PAA). On Thursday, a person named Kishore Kadam had called up a friend, who runs a clinic for dogs at Kolhapur. According to Kadam, they had received about 10 calls over the last three days, all complaining about the dogs' presence in the forest area. Nima Bhodagola, the doctor who runs the clinic, said that the dogs were abandoned here after an outbreak of Rabies in Kolhapur. The doctor assured Kadam and his friends that they would take care of the dogs. On Thursday, they called up Kadam and asked him to accompany them to the forest area, he said. While they were at the forest area, there was a stranger who came to the spot and started asking Kadam about their dogs. The stranger then allegedly shot the dog with a pistol. While the dog was bleeding, he moved on to a nearby tree and a man picked up the dog and ran away. Kadam's friend, who had called up the clinic, tried to intervene to stop him, but the stranger allegedly fired another shot at the friend, who had run away and fell from a height. Watch: The video of the dead dog, later circulated on social media and went viral. In addition to the wild chase, the video also shows the attempt to clean the dog's blood from the t-shirt of the unknown man. Every NFL quarterback has visions of putting on the pads and getting after it during OTAs and minicamp. But the majority of them never get the chance. Daniel Jones is the exception. As the first overall pick in the 2020 NFL Draft, the New York Giants got a quarterback who can play with a physical edge that goes beyond the words "Big Blue" tattooed on his back. New York will hold its first of three OTAs on Monday at the Quest Diagnostic Training Center. The Giants have invited media to their facilities for their first media access since Super Bowl LII. The Jones-led offense will be featured in a video that Giants officials are expected to post to social media. That's something unlike the consistent accuracy from the offense with Eli Manning at quarterback over the past two years. As a result, Jones faces a challenge in making the most of his first minicamp. He's shown flashes in OTAs of being mobile and especially accurate on deep throws. Since the draft, Jones has worked with quarterbacks coach Mike Sullivan with the goal of getting the ball out of his hands quickly. The Giants plan on using Jones, Manning and the Eli Manning-era protections against him. "We have the same protections we did last year, so I'm just trying to eliminate the mistakes as much as possible and improve on my accuracy and get rid of some of the things that were mistakes last year," Jones said last month. "Just trying to eliminate all the mistakes. I want to be as efficient as I can be. I know I can be." It's important Jones is efficient. The Giants need him to remain healthy and productive. He's spent two years at Duke, playing behind a premier offensive line, a defense that ranked No. 4 in sacks last season and an athletic running back in Saquon Barkley who is looking to build on a second consecutive 1,000-yard rushing season. Whether Manning can play at an elite level is another story. But the Giants have seen the best from him this offseason. Manning threw four touchdown passes in a two-part minicamp last month and was 7-for-7 in the team's spring game. "He's just a good-looking quarterback," said offensive coordinator Mike Shula. "...
